Danger

These are Foxtails. They are very dangerous to your dog. Your dog can die from them if they get them in their nose and they are not sneezed out or removed. They can cause an abscess if they penetrate the skin anywhere. Don't walk, air or train your dog in these!

These are Salmon. Salmon poisoning is a potentially fatal condition in dogs that eat raw salmon. June is salmon fishing season in Roseburg and the surrounding areas. If your dog should eat raw salmon, get medical attention as soon as possible. Clinical signs appear within 6 days. They are: vomiting, lack of appetite, fever, diarrhea, weakness, swollen lymph nodes and dehydration. Left untreated, death usually occurs within 14 days. 90 percent of untreated dog die.

Standard identification of poison oak. Leaves of three, let them be!

Poison Oak – It's typically found in rocky or shallow soiled areas, shaded or sunny areas. It typically has vibrant red leaves in the early spring and late fall, but the leaves are a deep green all summer. The leaves are made up of three leaflets and this is the best way to identify it. As the saying goes, leaves of three, let them be.

Rattlesnakes - The Western Diamondback makes its home in California and Oregon. Generally not aggressive, rattlesnakes strike if threatened or deliberately provoked, but given room they will retreat. Startled rattlesnakes may not rattle before they strike defensively. Rattlesnakes can swim and may be around water areas. If you or your dog gets bitten, seek medical attention immediately as a bite from one of these guys can be potentially fatal. Be especially careful around rock outcropping, but they can be anywhere. When it gets hot, you may encounter them more in the morning and late evening and even at night when it cools off.

Be careful wherever you train. Check out the area for all hazards, not just the ones above. Check for ditches, holes, buried implements or anything else that may be dangerous.

Airing Grounds

You may air your dogs in the field behind the Headquarters and at the Fair Grounds away from the trailers in the trailer park.
